THE REAL CULPRIT

The inflation-time habit of blaming the other fellow for high prices and calling your neighbor greedy, combined with the new game of stabilization by artificial controls, have all helped to obscure fundamental facts.

Mr. William J. Kuhfuss, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, stresses those facts in a few timely words. "In 1972," he points out, "we have a projected budget deficit of $38.8 billion (federal). This deficit is greater than the total U.S. budget in 1948. In 1972 a projected budget of $236 billion is twice the $118 billion budget of 1964. The interest on the government debt in 1972 is almost three times the total budget of 1938. In all the furor about food prices, the real culprit—government-fed inflation—has been generally overlooked. . . food prices are not the cause of inflation. The pressures of inflation. . . are primarily the result of excessive deficit spending on the part of the federal government and expansion of the money supply by the Federal Reserve Board. . ."

The confusion of inflation, people are losing sight of the basic principle that governments are no different than individuals in the long run. They must live within their means—the tax-paying resources of their citizens. — West Point (Miss.) Times Leader

Sergio stopped growing

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — The more the doctors study Sergio Pacheco, the more baffled they are. Why did the 14-year-old youngster stop growing at the age of 3?

After two months of study Dr. David Chadwick, who heads a team of researchers on the case, says, "I'm afraid our research so far has raised more questions than it has answered."

The dark-eyed Mexican boy was born in a hovel on the southern fringes of Tijuana. He grew normally for three years. Since then, he and his family say his normally apportioned body has changed only a fraction of an inch.

Doctors say he is 33 inches tall, weighs less than 40 pounds and actively competes in sports.

Sergio, a sophomore who does well in high school, gets along with his brothers and sisters, whose growth has been normal, and with his friends.

A campaign in San Diego has raised $1,000 to finance the research tests which Chadwick, a specialist at Children's Hospital, said have turned up "nothing to explain adequately his physical problems."

At first, it was thought Sergio either lacked sufficient growth hormones or suffered from a pituitary gland problem.

"Maybe it is something missing in his tissue structure that keeps his body from growing," Chadwick said in an interview Wednesday. "It could be a new missing factor as far as medical science is concerned."

New trend in education is affecting schools in state

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — A national trend toward "restructuring the process from kindergarten to the university" apparently is beginning to affect the policies of Arkansas colleges and universities.

Dr. Olin Cook, director of the state Department of Higher Education, said there is a growing trend throughout the country to give certain students advance standing and to allow high school students to enter college early.

"I think this is related to the need for restructuring the process from kindergarten to the university," he said.

Beginning this fall, the State College of Arkansas at Conway will allow high school students completing their junior year to enter college as full-time students, provided they meet certain requirements. The University of Arkansas at Fayetteville has a similar policy.

Cook noted that the state Board of Higher Education does not have the power to dictate such policies to Arkansas' colleges and universities. However, he said the Board would encourage such programs and "would like to see them standardized throughout the state" in an effort to achieve more uniformity.

"A student going to one state institution ought to have the same opportunity for credit as if he went to another institution," Dr. Cook said. "This is why it needs to be looked at from a statewide viewpoint."

Cook noted that the stepped-up educational programs should be carried out on a "selective basis" — in other words, for the mature and the highly intelligent.

Agreeing with Cook were Dr. A. E. Burbick, vice president of academic affairs at SCA, and Dr. Jimmy McCluskey, coordinator of the University at Jonesboro.

Burbick noted that SCA has experimented with the program on a limited basis for the past few years.

"Those students were mature," he said. "They succeeded and their education seemed to profit."

McCluskey noted that ASU normally only allows high school students to enroll in college for summer courses.

However, he said he sees "some justification" for a more extensive policy.

He noted, for example, that such a program would monetarily benefit the student because he would be "out on the job market that much sooner."

Also, McCluskey said, "the bright student moves right along."

"I don't think that students really should leave high school after six semesters in discrimination," he added. "There should be a great deal of counseling on the part of high school counselors on the part of collegiate admissions counselors."

Dr. Palmer C. Pilcher, vice president for academic affairs at the University of Arkansas, said the U of A has a program where some students can skip their senior year in high school and go into college.

Pilcher said the state's educational institutions have been "relatively slow to innovate" in this area, but that they are beginning to progress.

"Innovation is in the wind for Arkansas — not just for the U of A, but also for our sister institutions both public and private in the state," he said.

Girl, 10, pleads for refusal of divorce

VISALIA, Calif. (AP) — A 10-year-old girl has pleaded in a letter to a judge that her parents be refused a divorce.

The child, who was not identified, wrote: "Honorable Sir, My mom and dad is getting a divorce...please don't let them get a divorce. My momma loves my dad; if you could put him in the hospital he could quit drinking...."

"Sir, you are a judge and this is your job, to divorce people."

"Only where do ones go that still love the husbands? And how do you divorce a 10-year-old? Can you cut out my heart and stop it from hurting?"

The girl pleaded, "Please, please, please help a 10-year-old keep a mom and dad. I know if mom tried you probably wouldn't listen...."

"God bless you and let God be on this day the judge beside you."

Superior Court Judge Jay Ballantyne said Wednesday he sent copies of the letter to the attorneys representing the girl's parents and replied to her, "I am well aware of the tragedy which is involved every time parents separate where small children are involved....I can assure you that if either of your parents petition the court for an attempted reconciliation I will do all I can to help resolve their differences."

Nuclear Pacemaker Disclosed

By FRANK CAREY
AP Science Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — America's first implantations of long-lasting nuclear-powered cardiac pacemakers in humans have been disclosed.

The devices are powered by the same radioactive material, Plutonium-238, powering instruments on the moon.

The still-experimental devices, weighing about four ounces and about two-thirds the size of a cigarette pack, were successfully implanted this week near the hearts of two World War II veterans at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Buffalo, N.Y., according to Dr. Andrew Gage, the chief surgeon.

The men, aged 43 and 48, are doing well after the operations, and expectations are that their implants will last at least 10 years without requiring surgical replacement.

This compares with 18 months to two years for conventional, non-nuclear pacemakers already used by up to 60,000 Americans.

Non-nuclear pacemakers are powered by chemical batteries which must be replaced periodically.

Also, occasional battery failure can pose an emergency situation.

Atomic Energy Commission scientists have said they're hopeful that when commercial models of the nuclear pacemakers become available, the cost will be under $3,000.

Cardiac pacemakers are designed to maintain normal heartbeat in patients with "heart block," or injury to the heart's natural pacemaker, a nut-like nodule of tissue which regulates the heart's pumping action.

Dr. Gage said in a telephone interview that the nuclear pacemaker operations were performed on July 18 and 19.

He said both patients, who were not identified, have chronic heart-block and both have "worn" conventional, non-nuclear pacemakers for a number of years. One man had his for 12 years.

"They were each due for a battery-replacement for their conventional device," he related, "and we asked them if they would care to have one of the new nuclear-powered types implanted. They were fully informed about it, and they readily agreed."

Arabs to focus on America

CAIRO (AP) — A confidant of President Anwar Sadat affirmed the importance of Soviet friendship to Egypt today but said the Arabs must focus their efforts on the United States in order to end the current state of no-war, no-peace in the Middle East.

Mohammed Hassanein Heikal, chief editor of semi-official newspaper Al-Ahram, suggested that the Arabs can do this by imposing restrictions on the production of their petroleum at a time of growing American reliance on Middle East oil.

Heikal's remarks, made in his weekly editorial, came three days after Sadat announced he was sending home the Soviet military advisers to Egypt's armed forces.

Heikal reiterated his view that the only possible solution for the Middle East is "a political one which would include the use of military force at a certain point and at calculated risks."

"Did I ever tell you the one about Jesse Horn and the Riddle Hangin'?"

That story was one of many that my great uncle, Frances Marion Andres, used to entertain youthful relatives who visited him in the Sutton community years ago. He related stories about travelers waylaid in the night by a bloody butcher, wolf packs that preyed on little boys who wandered too far from the homestead, cattle thieves who paid the supreme sacrifice for their handiwork and died swinging from a sweet gum tree.

His favorite tale—about Jesse Horn—went something like this:

Did I ever tell you the one about Jesse Horn and the Riddle Hangin'?

Well sir, it seems that Jesse Horn was a man down on his luck, and as luck would have it, he was caught and charged with horse stealin.

Now, it was a fact that everybody liked Jesse, specially when he was drunk, but horse stealin was horse stealin and back when south Arkansas was nuthin but scrub pine, Indians and bears, horse stealin was much more serious than wife stealin.

Now, it was a fact that nobody wanted to hang ole Jesse, being he was down on his luck and all. So the big question was, What to do with Jesse Horn?

Some wisejay at the store where the trial was being held came up with an idea to settle the matter. "Why don't we give him a choice of one hang or nuther?" he said. "Lack what," another said. "Why don't he have to make up a riddle? If he can make up one we can't figger out, then we turn him loose. If we figger it out, then we stretch his neck."

Since that sounded fair nuff to most folks, Jesse was then and there instructed to come back the next day with a riddle for the group to try and unriddle.

Now that might not have sounded like much of a chore, but back in them days, telling riddles was a big pastime—that and pitchin' Warsheers—and everybody had heard mite near ever riddle ever invented.

But Jesse sure went home and went to studying on it. And sure nuff, the next day he was back, smiling from ear to ear. "What's small and round and keeps a man from going to town," he said. The crowd let out a collective groan. "Shucks, Jesse," one man said, "everybody knows that's a wedding ring."

Now not one man-jack of them wanted to hang ole Jesse Horn. So someone suggested Jesse Horn get one more chance.

Well sir, Jesse went home that night a sad, sad man. But something during the night he hit upon the perfect riddle, one that nobody could figger out.

The usual crowd had gathered at the store the next morning when up strolled Jesse Horn, again grinning from ear to ear. "I got a gooden, boys," he said, and cut loose:

"Horn eat a horn up a high oak tree,
"If you unriddle this, you may hang me!"

All the men looked at one nuther, shook their heads and smiled.

One man said: "That's shore a gooden. Boy that's a gooden. What's it mean, Jesse?"

Jesse smiled and said: Last night I was trying to think up a good nuff riddle to save my mangy hide, when I spied my old cow horn I use to call in my dawgs hangin there on the wall. Well sir, I whipped it down, walked down to the creek to that big old oak tree and clummed it clear to the top. Then I began to gnaw on that horn for all I was worth. "Horn eat a horn" I said to myself, and I got to laughing so hard I mite near fell out of that dig-blasted tree."

All the men were satisfied with that tale and they all commenced to get rip-roaring drunk.

And that's the tale of Jesse Horn and the Riddle Hangin.

Now then, did I ever tell you the one about...

Louise & Bill: Living in a world of touch

BATTLE CREEK, Mich. (AP) — After almost 40 years of blindness — and a lifetime of silence — Louise Selby, 60, and her brother Bill, 53, no longer seem to care very much about the world known only by touch.

They usually sit together in the sunny living room, touching each other for companionship and communication: sometimes quietly holding hands, other times with fingers flying in conversation.

But if one moves away without telling the other, there's visible panic in the searching hands that reach out — in ever widening circles — to regain contact with the other half of their world.

Staff members at the Country House here, a home for retarded but trainable adults, say they know very little about the pair. Records indicate only names, ages, brief diagnoses of their condition and health records since they were placed there by their father six years ago. Both were born deaf mutes, and went blind about 40 years ago, officials said.

In the six years they've been wards of the state, Louise and Bill have been oblivious to happenings outside their immediate surroundings. Wars, presidents, assassinations, even men on the moon are unknown to them — part of a world in which they seemingly have no interest.

Except for a brief schooling, the pair stayed at home and learned to take care of themselves. Bill became adept at craft work and Louise learned the needle skills of sewing, embroidery and hemstitching.

But today they seldom use those skills.

Although Louise is normally even tempered and dispositioned, she does occasionally show a big sister's pique — folding her hands in her lap and refusing to talk to Bill no matter how hard he tugs at her fingers.

But, as suddenly and inexplicably as it starts, it stops. And, she reaches out and traces her finger across his arm, as if to apologize.

Bill can communicate only through finger talk, and most of the staff and 20 other residents can get simple messages across to him. But, if it's complicated, Louise becomes the interpreter.

Since coming to Country House she's learned to read Braille and communicate through a Braille typewriter — a slow and tedious method — but a skill that opens a little bigger door to the world.

But, the only Braille books she ever asks for are Bible stories, which she reads over and over.

Las Vegas mystery-- where is Abe Schwartz?

By MURRAY OLDERMAN

LAS VEGAS, Nev.—(NEA)—Somewhere in this world, dead or alive, there is Avram Schwartz. He could be buried in some desolate corner of the vast Nevada desert. Or he could be living anonymously in Switzerland with the luxury of a numbered bank account. He could be at the bottom of some abandoned mine shaft. Or he could be secretly tucked away in his native Israel.

Babs Schwartz doesn't know.

She's Avram's wife. On the morning of May 15, a Monday, Avram got up early—6:30 a.m.—for a business meeting at the offices of a land company in Las Vegas. He left the low profile ranch house in a neat residential tract on Bancroft Circle, on the eastern edge of the city, at 7 a.m.

He disappeared. Not a trace. As if he never existed.

Avram's clothes—he had just replenished his wardrobe $2,000 worth—still hang in the closet of the master bedroom. His picture is in the den. His children—three of them, ages 7, 4 and 2—still talk vividly about "Daddy."

But a Las Vegas newspaper headlined: "Fear Vegas Businessman Murder Victim."

"I believe it," says Babs.

Abe Schwartz, as he was known to the people around town, is or was 33 years old. He had made a fantastic score in a fast-paced hustler's city that is used to fortunes being yanked up and down like a well bucket. Abe for the last two years has been walking around with nothing smaller than $100 bills in his pockets.

Babs was getting the same way. She was always used to a few grand around the house.

It's different now, more than two months since Abe vanished. Babs got a job as a secretary at a children's day camp at $60 a week.

She left that and plans to work for a land company bringing in prospective customers. It's speculative work. It's not enough to keep up a four-bedroom house with a swimming pool. It will be seven years before she can hope to collect Abe's $250,000 in life insurance. Lucky meanwhile she found a spare $1,000 in the safe they kept at home. She's worried and mystified. But no longer frantic.

"I can't live like the wives of war prisoners," she says. "That's only half a living. I have no hint that he's alive. I give up. I accept it. I have three healthy children to raise."

Babs had been seeing signs of strain in Abe. "The last month," she recalls,

"he was uptight. He started to gamble. He started smoking again."

The day before Abe failed to come home, however, had been quite normal and relaxed. Sunday brunch at the Flamingo with Babs and Bella, 7. Adam, 4, and Ira, 2. An Israeli couple came over in the afternoon—Abe, also a native of Israel, was trying to help keep them in the country. In the early evening, Babs' parents stopped by. At 9:15, Babs and her mother went shopping at a supermarket, a good time in hot Las Vegas. Abe and Mal, his father-in-law, stayed home and played gin.

The phone rang. Abe dragged it into another room, unusual for him. The call was from a California promoter named William Faisch, who had bought a motel from Abe. "You know," he said to Mal when he hung up, "that Faisch is afraid of me. I got to meet him in the morning."

Bright and early, he drove the leased Cadillac to an office parking lot at Las Vegas Boulevard South and Charleston. When Abe didn't call by 5 in the afternoon, Babs was perturbed. He'd often come home late, but he always let her know. She took the kids out to McDonald's for hamburgers. By 9 she was really worried. She started calling the hospitals and hotels on the Strip. Finally, the police.

The police didn't get excited. Las Vegas is a place where people have been known to disappear, often voluntarily. There are distractions.

"Even with all his erratic habits," maintains Babs, "I knew he wasn't running around. He'd come home at 5 in the morning and it was the same old Abe."

The police said, "He has to be missing 72 hours."

She notified the FBI and was told it wasn't in their jurisdiction. No ransom note or evidence of kidnapping.

The car was later found in the parking lot where Abe left it.

"He's missing and that's all we know to date," says an agent of the local FBI office. "The U.S. Attorney's office has told us the case doesn't fit our statutes. Quite frankly, I think he's dead. He was involved with unscrupulous characters who were totally capable of removing him."

The only action to date in the case of Avram Schwartz, listed as a missing person, is revelation of an amazingly complex web of business deals which turned a studious Hebrew schoolteacher at the only temple in Las Vegas into an uptight, gambling, roistering entrepreneur.

Yet it's still difficult to unsnarl the ultimate motive for his disappearance because there seldom has been a businessman like Avram Schwartz.

He and Babs arrived in Las Vegas eight years ago. Avram had a teaching degree from the Herzlia Hebrew Institute in New York. The Temple Beth Shalom hired him at $6,500 a year. He was a small, intense man—and penniless. He met and married Babs in New York. His mother-in-law had to buy him clothes for the wedding.

In 1968, he met a motel owner who wanted to move to Israel. Abe, in partnership with Rabbi Aaron Gold of the temple, leased the motel. Then Abe acquired another motel and another, and another, until soon he was operating five motels. He was forced to give up his teaching job three years ago. By then, he could afford to.

"He was a tough businessman," admits his wife.

"People didn't like him. He drove a hard bargain. He made enemies. There were threats on his life."

He started to unload the motels until now there is only one, a Grade D place called the Ranch Inn, left in his name. He shifted his attention to land development and in partnership with Dave Bliss, a Las Vegas motel owner, formed OPC, Inc. (Outside Personal Contact), which worked on a personal service contract with Cavanagh Land Communities, delivering locations. It was a big money deal.

There were enigmas, too. With all the money, he borrowed $2,500 from a Las Vegas bank on a short-term loan. It hasn't been repaid. Two Israeli friends gave him virtually their life savings of $10,000 on Abe's promise that he would get them a 20 per cent return or better. They're left without a cent.

Babs knew there was a total of $30,000 in their safe at home (Abe didn't believe in bank accounts). Five thousand went for a motel payment. The rest, a cashier's check for $25,000, was gone. Along with Abe. In the wake of his disappearance, Rabbi Gold was dismissed by the temple.

There are reports Abe didn't pay taxes the last three years, that he gambled big at the Palomino Club (his father-in-law saw him lose $700 one night), that "he was running around with broads every night."

"When you check into Abe's affairs," cautions Dave Bliss, "you're looking into a hornet's nest."

But who knows where the hornet is?

Grounds for Arrest

Two policemen, cruising in a "narcotics neighborhood," saw a man emerge from an apartment house and head for a waiting taxicab. After a quick glance up and down the street, he entered the cab.
Their suspicions aroused, the officers approached the cab and—although they had no warrant—placed the man under arrest. Sure enough, he was carrying a quantity of heroin.

But when the case came to court, the judge held the arrest unlawful and the evidence inadmissible. He said the police had no right to act on what was little more than a hunch.

Under most narcotics laws, officers may arrest without a warrant only if they have "reasonable grounds" for suspecting a violation. This means something more than a vague feeling that something is amiss.

Even tip from an informer may not be enough. Thus: A narcotics user told police he had gotten his supply from a certain "Joe" at a certain address. Police found and arrested Joe, but again the arrest was held improper.

Reason: the police had no prior experience with this particular informer, hence no special reason to consider him trustworthy, hence no "reasonable grounds" for making the arrest. By contrast, a court upheld an arrest when the informer had repeatedly turned out to be right in the past.

Of course, direct observation by officers may also provide adequate grounds for an arrest. For example:

A narcotics agent listening at the door of an apartment heard incriminating statements by the two men inside. Meanwhile, another agent peering through a window saw them pouring white powder into typical heroin containers.

These circumstances were enough, a court ruled later, to support the agents in making an arrest.

"A prudent man would be justified," said the court, "in believing that a violation of the narcotics law was being committed."

The Generation Rap

One Readers Answer the Mail
Dear Readers:
Which early summer correspondent drew most response? "FOLLOWER OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS" won by a country mile—and she got nothing but rocks! She was the one who called us "monsters" (among other things) because we said "Parents are not always right just because they are parents."

Here are samplings:
Dear Helen and Sue:
I don't often have time to write long letters, but I must make an exception. This is directed to FOLLOWER OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS who called herself a parent but, in my opinion, is not even a good excuse!

I am a Southern Baptist Minister and I strongly object to her type of thinking. I work with young people, and parents like her—rigid, demanding, condemning, intolerant and unlistening—are the cause of delinquency, drug abuse, homosexuality, rebellion and not (as she seems to think) the cures.

My mother raised five children without my father, who deserted us. We grew up talking about all sorts of problems, including sex—and I don't mean prying on her part. This helped me in dealing with the problems of others. It helped us all. We're a very close family.

As for Planned Parenthood, is FOTTC saying it is better for an unwanted child to be born and starve or be mistreated than not to be born at all? Birth control does not make a girl's standards high or low. Only love helps decide her moral values. If she can't get it at home, she searches elsewhere, sometimes in the wrong places.

"Me Boss—You Slave" doesn't bring love!

I think you have done a fantastic job with youth in TRUTH, Helen and Sue. Keep up the good work.—Rev. C.T.C., San Antonio

Dear Rap:

"Togetherness, discipline, morals, loyalty, respect, honor thy father and mother" are some of the best ingredients for a good family, but FOLLOWER OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS "insists" on them, which means she doesn't really have anything but discipline and that could break down fast. "Togetherness" comes from love (something she didn't mention). Respect and loyalty must be earned; morals are instilled. And who could really "honor" parents like her?—M and T

Dear Helen and Sue:

That weirdo who thinks she follows the Ten Commandments is more gone than any of the "criminals" (VD carriers, drug addicts, homosexuals) she mentions, because these people can be helped with tolerance and understanding (not by calling them criminals), while she thinks she's God, who has to judge people. She has a disease too: it's called BIGOTRY.

"Talking things over" with your parents is the only way to go. Parents like her who think "talking" is "rebellious" would be murder to live with—especially if they expected to live with you when they got older (which they say is their right because YOU lived with them for 18 years). Yeacht!!!—AGE 12, SO SHE PROBABLY WON'T LISTEN (BUT MY PARENTS DO)

Dear Rap:

This is for "NEVER THOUGHT OF IT BEFORE" whose fiancé won't allow her to wear a sleeveless dress. You'd better think about it! Unless you are willing to give up all freedom and submit to ever-increasing rules and demands, you'd better not marry.

When I was married my husband decreed "no pants," so I wore house-dresses, thinking it was a small concession. Next he said "no work outside the home." Following that, "a good wife doesn't drive a car or gad around." Watch out or you'll become like me—A PRISONER IN HER OWN HOME

Dear Rap:
Just why can't a guy tell a girl what he thinks she looks good in? If he doesn't want her to wear clothes that degrade him and make him feel insecure that's his right. My girl friend wears what I like!—ONE MALE WHO DISAGREES

Dear One:
Does she sit up and beg too?

"Well," said South, disconsolately, "I put out the bait but the fish wouldn't take it."

"I don't mind you calling my partner a fish," remarked East, "but if you do, please refer to him as a shark."

South had won the first trick with the ace of diamonds; led a diamond to dummy's king and carefully ruffed a third diamond with his five of trumps.

That five-spot was the bait but West had refused to win an easy trump trick. Perhaps he was suspicious about the bait but since he was a shark the chances are that he had seen that a simple club discard would leave South with no way to run dummy's diamonds.

Just suppose West had overruled. It wouldn't matter what he did next. South would gain the lead in time to play the ace of trumps; lead a low trump to dummy's queen and get enough discards on diamonds to give him his contract.

When West failed to overrule he could do no better than to get out for one down. He cashed a high trump; led low to dummy's queen; played a fourth diamond and discarded a low spade.

West ruffed and had to lead a spade or a club to set up one of South's kings for South's ninth trick, but the other king became a fallen monarch and would not score the 10th trick.

What do you do now?

A—If your partner will understand that a six-diamond call at this point will show one ace and a void, bid six diamonds. Otherwise, just bid five diamonds.

TODAY'S QUESTION

You do bid six diamonds and your partner bids six spades. What do you do now?

LOYAL TO GARDENERS

LONDON (AP) — A 70-year-old widow sold her home for 80,000 pounds ($208,000) — and bought it back a couple of weeks later for 86,000 ($223,600) because "I heard the six gardeners might have to go."

Mrs. Dorothy Pierson's mock-Tudor mansion stands in 25 acres near Ipswich. There are landscaped gardens, a tree-lined drive and a swimming pool.

Mrs. Pierson said, "My gardeners worked tremendously hard to make the grounds beautiful. I wouldn't like them to lose their jobs through any action of mine."

The house, with 14 bedrooms and six bathrooms, is too big to live in alone, so Mrs. Pierson plans to build a bungalow for herself in those lovely gardens. She still hopes to sell the house.

$96 MILLION PROJECT

SYDNEY (AP) — The state government has before it a plan to build an 11-mile private railway through a string of northern seaside suburbs between Pittwater and Manly.

The scheme estimated to cost $96 million provides for a major transport terminal at Manly.

Manly, which extends from the ocean to Sydney Harbor, already has a steamer harbor ferry service to the city.

The railway, mainly underground, would take commuters to and from the Manly ferry. The area at present is served by bus.

Recently the Red River Vocational Technical School was host to a demonstration and instruction course on emergency care and rescue operation in the event of a serious tragedy.

The course was supervised by Dr. Ed Edney, emergency medical specialist of Little Rock, Jess Barnes, Branch Hospital technician, Dr. Lowell Harris, and Mrs. Mary Turner, nursing instructor at the Red River school.

The Hempstead County Rescue Unit had an opportunity to display a new K-12 Rescue saw. Edney and Barnes were placed in an overturned car to simulate being pinned inside the wreckage. The rescue unit, using the new type saw, proceeded to saw the metal away from the victims and removed them safely to a waiting Hempstead County Ambulance.

Attending and participating in the course were: Tommy McKee, John House, Jess Barnes and Rescue Chief James Luck of the local rescue unit; Perry Campbell, James Vess, Larry Moses and Mike Gibson of Hempstead County Ambulance Service; Charles Hutcheson and Lee Breithaupt of Miller County Rescue Unit; rescue chief Emyle Dozier, William Burke, William Ross, and Roger Moore of the Malvern Rescue Unit; and Dale Foster and E. O. Bennett of Nashville Ambulance Service.

Dr. Edney explained to the group that approximately 115,000 persons die of accidental injury each year and according to an estimate by the American Congress of Surgeons and the Academy of Orthopedic Surgery, 20 per cent or more die needlessly due to improper or lack of care at the scene of the accident.

The session was part of an 80 hour training program being provided by the department of transportation.

ASTROGRAPH

BY BERNICE BEDE OSOL

For Saturday, July 22, 1972
In general: You can't be all things to all people. Select associates and friends cautiously, looking in on those who appreciate the "real" you. Words to live by today: DISCERNING and DETACHED.

ASTROGRAPH divides your horoscope into 6 sections. Use the letters and numbers under your sign. Numbers describe today's influences. Letters give the section. Circled number evaluates your hidden aspects.

Documentary: One price of progress

For many years Dean's Truck Stop on U.S. Highway 67 just west of Hope was a favorite resting place for truckers and car-bound travelers alike. It featured a hotel, restaurant, garage and service station, and was situated just a stone's throw away from the state weighing station.

It was not uncommon for 30 trucks to be lined up in front of the buildings, almost obscuring them from the roadway. But with the completion of a nearby stretch of Interstate-30 several miles away, Dean's Truck Stop and the adjoining buildings closed their doors. The buildings, are rented now, but are empty. Only the garage is ever used. This is one price of progress.

AT LEFT—A brass door latch on the restaurant door, battered and rubbed smooth by thousands of hands.

Beautiful America Polluted America

Our 'longer, fuller — better life' has begun to mock us. We are disgusted with dirty air and vile water and ugliness that has become the backwash of modern goods and services.

We are alarmed by the warning that we are upsetting the balance of nature, causing the most pressing environmental crisis in history.

Pollution is everyone's concern. We will not renovate and rejuvenate our environment until we start moving our criticism from the living room to the legislature, and from the back fence to the ballot box.

To put more teeth in pollution controls will take the voice of the people. Your voice can contribute to a reversal of our trend toward self-destruction.

Cooling crickets
TOKYO (UPI) — During summer months, live crickets housed in bamboo cages are sold by street peddlers throughout Japan because Japanese consider the voice of the cricket as a cooling sound. Cricket peddlers are called mushi-ori. The custom is said to have been started in Tokyo about 250 years ago by a vegetable shop proprietor who collected crickets in order to entertain his children.

The Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights are enshrined in the National Archives Exhibition Hall in Washington, D.C. The World Almanac notes that these documents are sealed in glass-and-bronze cases filled with inert helium gas, and can be lowered at a moment's notice into a large shockproof and fire-proof safe.

The Roman Catholic Church eliminated 200 saints from its Liturgical Calendar on May 9, 1969.
